BEN-GURION BESPEAKS COOPERATION WITH EGYPT TO ADVANCE PEACE

Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion, referring in the Knesset (Parliament) to Maj. Gen. Mohammed Naguib, the Egyptian "strong man", said that Israel had no quarrel with the Cairo Government and that cooperation with Israel would help Egypt to overcome her political and social problems and raise her international status.

Replying to a threat by the Syrian dictator, Col. Adeeb Shishekly, to wipe Israel off the map, Mr. Ben-Gurion warned: "Damascus is no farther from Galilee than Galilee is from Damascus."

Mr. Ben-Gurion's conciliatory references to the Egyptian leader during the Knesset debate on proposals to increase the period of compulsory military service evoked protests from the Communist, who charged that the Prime Minister was seeking to prepare public opinion for an anti-Soviet military pact with General Naguib. But Mr. Ben-Gurion said categorically that peace with the Arab states, whose war with Israel ceased under an armistice was no nearer than before and that the new Egyptian Government had given no indication that it wanted to reach a treaty.

Mr. Ben-Gurion said he was accepting General Naguib's statement that he and his friends in the Egyptian Army had opposed the invasion of Israel in 1948. Israel, the Prime Minister continued, has no political, economic or territorial quarrels with Egypt, says the New York Times.

This statement was taken to mean that the narrow coastal strip of former Palestinian territory from the border of Sinai to a point south of Gaza, which is occupied by [illegible] is no obstacle to [illegible] and would [illegible] Egypt's economy. Mr. Ben-Gurion's declaration implies that Israel is ready to reach a settlement on the disposal of the strip and of the refugees in it.

"We have no enmity against Egypt for what was done four years ago," the Prime Minister said, adding that Israel had manifested her goodwill by not taking advantage of Egypt's quarrel with Britain by attacking her.

Turning to Colonel Shishekly, he declared that, unlike General Naguib, the Syrian leader not only had not opposed the invasion of Israel but in fact had led the attack and barely saved his neck. Mr. Ben-Gurion said the Syrian's threat might have been designed for Arab consumption, but that Israel could not afford to be complacent.

The Israeli Foreign Ministry will instruct its permanent United Nations delegate, Abba Eban, to protest to the Security Council against the proclamation by Colonel Shishekly, who said that the Middle East was not large enough for both the Jews and the Arabs.

Declaring that the Israeli-Syrian armistice agreement explicitly forbids the use of threats, a Foreign Ministry spokesman in Tel Aviv said Israel would demand a meeting of the Israeli-Syrian Mixed Armistice Commission. Also, the attention of the United Nations chief truce adviser, Lieut. Gen. William E. Riley, will be drawn to the alleged breach of the armistice.

Mr. Ben-Gurion said most of the members of the United Nations wanted peace between Israel and the Arab states because peace in the Middle East would improve the prospects of peace in the world and of the social, cultural and economic advancement of the area's peoples. But he warned that Israel could not rely on the world organization's protection and would have to maintain military preparedness along with her desire for peace.

He warned that the state of preparedness that had sufficed to defeat the Arabs in 1948 would be inadequate today since Israel's neighbors had learned military lessons and had improved their forces.

Asked about Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion's statement in the Israeli Parliament to the effect that [illegible] Egypt, both Abdel Rahman Azzam, general of the Arab League, and the Egyptian Premier, Aly Maher, said that no official overture had been received. Mr. Azzam added that it was impossible to expect Egypt, to make peace with Israel while "more than one million Arabs have been thrown out of their native country (Palestine) and live in miserable conditions." Mr. Azzam also charged that Israel was increasing her military strength and "threatening Syria and (Lieut. Col. Adib) Shishekly (Syrian chief of

Corporation To Be Chartered In U.S. For Restitution From Germany

The negotiations on compensation for Nazi anti-Semitic acts have moved a step nearer completion with the formulation of recommendations for an agreement with world Jewish organizations.

The main element is a program for improving West German machinery for individual restitution and indemnification. Joint recommendations on this subject were drawn up in the first phase of the talks last April but had to be reopened when the German ministries raised objections. The new program was described at Wassenaar, the Netherlands, as going farther in some respects than the original proposals but not so far in other respects.

On one point there is still no agreement—the extension of restitution to Austrian Jews. Satisfactory formulas have been found to cover expropriated Jews in territories occupied by the Third Reich, but the Bonn negotiators are still opposed to taking responsibility for Austria, which, as they see it, had a fully Nazi Government of her own, reports the New York Times.

The issue has been referred to the West German Cabinet, but whatever the decision, it is not likely to deter the final agreement.

West Germany also has consented to pay $107,000,000 as a token compensation for the heirless and unclaimed assets of Jewish persons seized by the Nazis. That money would be used for the relief and rehabilitation of Jewish victims of the Hitler regime. The sum would be added to the $715,000,000 in goods deliveries to be made to Israel.

Because the world Jewish delegation, representing about fourteen organizations united in the Conference on Jewish Material Claims Against Germany, has not a formal juridical status it has been agreed that a Jewish corporation will be set up and chartered in the United States to assume responsibility for the execution of the agreement.

In the parallel German negotiations with the Israeli Government there also is one remaining unsettled point. This is the Israeli demand for a "stability clause," guaranteeing against any loss from fluctuations in prices resulting from possible German devaluation or other currency manipulations.

So far the Germans have opposed such a clause arguing that even to give such an undertaking might raise doubts about the stability of German currency. They have suggested, instead, an exchange of letters providing for new discussions in the event of any appreciable change in the value of the Deutsche mark.

The search for a compromise has been held up because Chancellor Konrad Adenauer and other German ministers are all on vacation, but German sources are hopeful that a solution will be found soon.

The [illegible] of goods to be [illegible] secret, says the New York Times, but one item is reported to be 150,000,000 Deutsche mark (about $35,715,000) worth of oil to be bought by Germany in the sterling area.

New Bill Steps Up Service In Army

The measure providing for a six months' increase in the period of compulsory military service was approved on first reading in the Knesset (Parliament) on August 19 by 70 votes to 11. Under it, service for men in the 16 to 26 age group is increased from two years to thirty months and service for the 27 to 29 [illegible] remains [illegible] years.

All the opposition groups voted with the Government coalition except the pro-Soviet Mapam and Communist parties whose spokesmen asserted that the reforms were connected with plans to establish a regional force for an attack upon Russia. A Government spokesman made it clear that the proposed reforms had nothing to do with recent political developments in the Arab states and that they were not designed to enlarge the armed forces but only to maintain present strength.

As Eliezer Livneh of the Mapai explained, hitherto, the army had drawn men from new immigrants between the ages of 18 and 29 and from local youths turning 18. With the virtual stoppage of immigration the only source was the 18-year-olds and this was insufficient to maintain the armed forces at strength, reports the New York Times. In addition the reforms are designed to maintain standards. The problem was that most of the recruits from the Islamic countries were uneducated and needed training in fundamentals. Mr. Ben-Gurion devoted most of his closing address to this aspect.

"We are not yet a nation," he declared. "It took other peoples, such as the British, centuries to mould a nation out of the heterogeneous tribes who did not speak a common language and had divergent ideas. Israel could not wait so long and only the armed forces provided the framework and machinery for speeding up the process."

Mr. Ben-Gurion answered his critics who had spoken cynically of the peace feelers he had put out to the Egyptian dictator, Maj. Gen. Mohammed Naguib. He said it would not matter if the approach failed, but he would not want it said by future generations that the Israeli Government had neglected to take advantage of any opening affording an opportunity for peace with the Arabs. He made it clear that he did not have much hope that anything would come out of his conciliatory gesture toward General Naguib.

He also defended the statement he had made before the Arab invasion in 1948 when he paid tribute to King Abdullah of Jordan whom he had called "a great Arab leader." He said he still believed today that Abdullah was the greatest Arab leader, reports the New York Times.

Mr. Ben-Gurion added that throughout his Zionist career he had striven for understanding with the Arabs. Foreign Minister Moshe Sharett joined in the debate to emphasize Mr. Ben-Gurion's statement to the effect that Israel was prepared to stay at peace with [illegible] one or all of her Arab neighbors.

Was World Famous As Stamp Expert

Otto Waldemar Friedl, a leading philatelic authority, died at Stamford, N.Y., where he was on a vacation. Under the terms of his will the announcement was withheld until after his funeral at Ferncliff Cemetery, near Ardsley. He was 73 years old.

Born in Vienna, Mr. Friedl was the son of Sigmund Friedl, who in 1891 established Friedl's Postage Stamp Museum in Doebling, a Vienna suburb. This institution became world-famous, with contributions of rare stamps being made by leading philatelists of the time.

Through its operations, Otto Friedl was thrown into association with the Italian Count Philip Ferrary, who made him his philatelic adviser. Together they traveled widely for years in search of postal classics until Count Ferrary built a collection valued at several million dollars.

This he bequeathed to the Berlin Postal Museum, but he died in Paris before the stamps could be transferred to Germany, and the French Government confiscated and sold it against Germany's World War I reparations. Count Ferrary left his almost priceless collection of gold coins to Mr. Friedl, but the latter never received them because they vanished mysteriously during the war, according to the New York Times.

The Nazi invasion of Austria in 1938 compelled Mr. Friedl to liquidate the stamp business he had inherited from his father, and he fled to Paris. Three years later he narrowly escaped capture when the Germans occupied France. He came to New York in 1941 and became a partner in the Mercury Stamp Company, 522 Fifth Avenue. He became an American citizen in 1946.

Because of his broad knowledge of philately, Mr. Friedl was appointed to international stamp exhibition juries at Berlin in 1930 and Vienna in 1936. He was a member of the Collectors' Club of New York and the American Stamp Dealers' Association.

Israelis Rush To Buy Books As Exchange Rate Is Cut For U.S. Publications

The last obstacle to getting a full line of books, magazines and newspapers from the United States into Israeli bookshops and newsstands was overcome by an agreement setting an exchange rate for the import of books at $1.40 for £1.

This agreement, between the United States Embassy and the Israeli Government, will make it possible to sell publications 28 per cent cheaper than when the exchange rate was $1 for £1. The new accord also will make it possible to reach a wider market and to implement fully the Information Media Guarantee Program that was established under the terms of the Mutual Security Act.

United States publishers now can sell their publications for local currency in Israel and collect dollars from the United States Treasury. The United States Embassy will use the Israeli pounds for cultural and educational activities in Israel.

The new exchange rate also will make it easier for the United States to keep up with Soviet propaganda, says the New York Times. The Soviet Union arranged a more favorable rate of exchange for itself several months ago.

The information media program was invoked because the Israeli Government allocated no hard currency for the import of books after the end of September, 1951. As a result, the flow of books to Israel from countries that depended on commercial channels for distribution dried up. The Soviet Union, not concerned with profit and loss in this respect, was with a clear field and flooded the market.

From the day the information media program started, Israeli newspaper and book [illegible] buying [illegible] could obtain United States books, magazines and newspapers and pay in pounds. Bookstores that had never sold one subscription to a United States magazine sold hundreds of dollars worth in a few hours. The biggest emphasis was on scientific publications, but the Israelis also wanted fashions and fiction.

Alarmed by the rush, and unaccustomed to free trade, local booksellers tried at first to restrict the amount of subscriptions. They said they were afraid that United States publishers might be "dumping" the publications.

Under the new exchange rate the bookstores are expecting another wave of orders, according to the New York Times. Meanwhile, they will have to refund a percentage of the orders received at the higher rate of exchange.

The new rate of exchange applies to all kinds of publications from all countries whether or not they come under the guarantee program.

Contracts of guarantee with the United States Government have been signed by ten publishers for the amount of publications each is willing to send to Israel up to June 15, 1954. A total of $300,000 in such contracts is divided as follows:

Doubleday & Co., Inc., and its subsidiary Hakinton & Co. $20,000; Macfadden Subscription Agency, $20,000; Pocketbooks, Inc., $20,000; Curtiss [illegible], Inc., $20,000; McGraw-Hill, Inc., $22,000; Crowell-Collier Publishing Company, $27,000; New American Library of World Literature, Inc., $10,000; Minneapolis Collection, $20,000; [illegible]

Mr. and Mrs. L. Zimmerman, Lorne Crescent, announce the engagement of their daughter, Ruth Hedy, to Barney Vinegar, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Vinegar, of Chatham, and Andover, N. B. The wedding will take place on January 4, 1953, at Beth David Synagogue.

MARRIAGES

SIGLER-ROSEN

The marriage of Neysa, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Rosen, Maplewood Avenue, to David Aaron Sigler, son of Mr. and Mrs. Max I. Sigler, Willowdale Avenue, took place in Young Israel Synagogue, at noon, on August 17, Rabbi M. Lewittes officiating. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a cocktail-length white lace gown, with a halter neckline and bolero, the full skirt of net having a lace apron effect. Her ballerina crown was of seed-pearl and lustre beads, and was worn with a short circular veil of tulle illusion. She carried a white prayer book covered with white orchids and stephanotis. Mrs. Charles Gomberg, as matron of honor for her sister, was in an ankle-length gown of white embroidered net over lilac-coloured taffeta. Her coronet was composed of white and lilac flowers and she carried a bouquet of white feathered carnations. Miss Marcia Rosen, sister of the bride, as bridesmaid, was in a matching gown but her underskirt was of lime-green taffeta. Her headdress of pink and green flowers was caught with a lime-green bow and she carried pink feathered carnations. Joseph Dickstein was best man. The ushers were: Lazarus Rosen, Dr. Charles Gomberg, Alec Mayers, and Marvyn Kusmer. The chapel was decorated with white gladioli, cedar, and dogwood trees. There was a luncheon for the family. Mrs. Rosen received in a cocktail gown of pleated gray tissue faille. Her corsage bouquet of pink orchids matched her pink feather hat. Mrs. Sigler wore a Delft-blue taffeta gown, with a large Milan straw hat, and white orchid shoulder corsage. Later, Mr. and Mrs. Sigler left by motor on a wedding trip to Cape Cod, Mass., and New York, the bride travelling in a cinnamon-brown suit with accessories to match. They will reside on Maplewood Avenue. The bride is a graduate of the McGill University Department of Education. The bridegroom is a graduate in Civil Engineering of McGill University.

SCHMELTZMAN-LIGHTMAN

The marriage of Miss Toby Lightman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. Lightman, 6139 Durocher Avenue, to Kenny Schmeltzman, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. H. Schmeltzman, of Poland, took place at Beth David Synagogue on June 10, at half-past seven o'clock. Rabbi I. Teicher officiated, assisted by Cantor J. Ditn. The bride was given in marriage by her parents; and the groom, by his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. J. Frankel, Hutchison Street. The bride's gown was of white lace. It was fashioned with a bodice, fitted to the waistline, with a small beaded collar, and net insertion, bordered with beading; long sleeves, pointed at the wrists; and a full skirt, which extended to a full train. She had a small crown, with an illusion veil; and carried a fan, adorned with mauve orchids, and white streamers and sweet peas. Mrs. Rubin Gilsig, the matron of honor, wore a blue net off-the-shoulder dress, with a blue picture hat; and carried a horse-shoe-shaped bouquet of pink carnations. The junior bridesmaids were Misses Sheila Lightman, sister of the bride; and Marylin Wainberg, cousin of the bride. The former was dressed in a blue net off-the-shoulder gown, with white flowers on the skirt, and a matching hat; and the latter, was in a yellow net off-the-shoulder gown, with a matching hat. They carried nosegays of seasonal flowers. Harold Schmeltzman, brother of the groom, was best man; and the ushers were: Norman Lightman, brother of the bride; Rubin Gilsig, Sol. Wainberg, Abe Lightman, and Jack Weinberg, uncles of the bride; and Samuel Proschkowitz, cousin of the groom. Seasonal flowers were used to decorate the synagogue; and for the reception, there were flowers and candles on the tables. An orchestra played. Receiving, Mrs. Lightman wore a brown lace dress, with a brown flowered hat; and had a corsage of yellow roses. Mrs. Frankel wore a black lace dress, with a black and green hat; and a corsage of red roses. The bride and groom spent their wedding trip in New York, the former wearing a beige suit, with a white blouse; a navy-blue and pink hat; navy-blue purse and shoes to match, with a pink shortie coat, and a mauve orchid corsage. They are living at 6139 Durocher Avenue. Here for the wedding were S. Wallace, of New York; and Mr. and Mrs. M. Tepper, of Philadelphia, Pa.

Expert Left Large Book Estate To Foundation

Dr. A. S. W. Rosenbach, the noted bibliographer, has left his personal collection of rare books and manuscripts and the bulk of his estate to the Philip H. and A. S. W. Rosenbach Foundation. Dr. Rosenbach, who died July 1 at the age of 76, established the foundation with his brother Philip on April 28, 1950. It is described as a charitable organization with "very general purposes."

No estimate of the amount of the estate was given in his will, filed for probate in New York, but Morris Wolf, the executor and trustee, said that it was large. Dr. Rosenbach estimated once that during his half-century of buying and selling books his purchases had totaled $75,000,000.

The foundation is to receive the residue of the estate after bequests totalling $122,500. The residue also includes Dr. Rosenbach's interest in the Rosenbach company, dealer in rare books. Among the beneficiaries is Dr. I. S. Baydin, vice president in charge of medical affairs at the University of Pennsylvania, described as "my friend and physician."

Dr. Rosenbach also directed that each of the Rosenbach company employes of more than five year's service receive $100 for each year's service. He stipulated that $60,000 be used to pay his brother Moses P., who is 80, a total of $5,000 a year. His brother Philip, 88, is to receive an amount not in excess of $20,000 a year, if he requires it.

The public library shelves offer a very satisfying form of relaxation in the books available for purposes of research, instruction or amusement. The library staff will help children to form a taste for the best in reading with volumes that might otherwise be beyond the capacity of the family budget.

SINGERMAN: The unveiling of a monument to the memory of the late Mrs. Ida (Chaika) Singerman will take place on Sunday morning, August 31, at half-past eleven o'clock, at the Yiddisher cemetery in Cartierville; in case of rain, at the same time, September 7. Relatives and friends are invited.

Yehoash Poetry In English

BY PHILIP RUBIN, IN THE CONGRESS BULLETIN

"Poems Of Yehoash," selected and translated by Isidore Goldstick, with a biographical sketch by Evlin Yehoash Dworkin, Canadian Yehoash Committee.

During his lifetime Yehoash, the pen-name of Solomon Bloomgarden, was known as one of the most eminent among Yiddish poets who were living in the United States. Today he is chiefly remembered for his monumental work in translating into Yiddish the complete Hebrew Bible, to which he provided a supplement of scholarly exegetical notes. A prose volume of his, The Feet of the Messenger, appeared in English translation in 1923.

Yehoash was born in Lithuania in 1870 or 1871, settled in the United States in 1890 and died there in 1927. During the latter half of his comparatively short life he became ill with tuberculosis and was forced to live many years in Colorado. Knowing that he would not live his full span of years, Yehoash worked all the more intensively during the last decade and a half of his life on his Bible translation. As though sustained by his sacred task, he died when he had finished the last revision of his translation. As long as Yiddish will be read anywhere in the world Yehoash's fine literary rendition of the Bible into that language will be gratefully appreciated.

Yehoash's poetry has been called all sorts of things—lyrical, epical, intellectual, pantheistic. It is true that he brought a new note into Yiddish poetry, a more intense individualism and a greater preoccupation with nature than were exhibited by the more ghetto-minded poets who were his contemporaries or who preceded him. Still, his verse generally has the authentic ring of Jewishness. In typically Jewish fashion, he imputed characteristically human modes of behavior to objects in nature. His concern with ethical values is in the Hebraic tradition. Many of his themes are Biblical, though one also meets with a poem like "A Prayer to Buddha," where the poet, yearing for Nirvana, forgetfulness, implores the Hindu deity to:

Put out the spark that's in me
And enshroud me with thy darksomeness;
Pray, shiver this frail vessel,
And let the fluid scatter
And mingle with thine ample rivers.

His momentary attraction to things Gentile, while realizing that he is a stranger to them, Yehoash expresses in a little poem, "Angelus":

The air is filled with tender grace, while I stand awed
Before the love and beauty of an alien god.
Ding-dong, ding-dong, my heart thirsts for the peals divine;
I drink the solace of a god that is not mine.

It was his long, drawn-out illness which removed him from the New York ghetto that had much to do with the molding of Yehoash the poet. To his struggle for sheer physical survival may be ascribed his closeness to nature, his sometimes un-Jewish pantheism, his preoccupation with death:

The night draws near,
Shadows weave fantastic shapes and drear.
The flame begins to narrow and to wane,
While round the fire ashes spread.—
Have you cut your ears of grain,
Have your sheaves been harvested?
The night draws near.

In connection with Yehoash's love of nature, one is reminded of a great New England writer, Henry David Thoreau, who was also tubercular. Thoreau's nature love went to such extremes that he was able to live for two years in the woods all by himself and write a great book about his experiences, Walden. But to Thoreau the Gentile, with the blood of generations of hunters and backwoodsmen in him, the feeling of kinship with nature was a more vital thing than to Yehoash, product of the ghetto who had to acquire this love, and so Yehoash's nature poems are of the quieter, tamer sort, with little force to them.

Dr. Goldstick has caught the spirit of Yehoash in his excellent English rendering of the poems. The Canadian Yehoash Committee, located in the small city of London, Ontario, deserves a vote of thanks for getting out his small volume in an attractive binding. And now if the prosperous five million United States Jews, in whose midst the famous Yiddish poet and short-story writer Abraham Reisen has been living for many years, won't get busy soon, the few Jews up there in Canada may beat them to it by getting out in English a selection of Reisen's poetry and prose, which would be the first Reisen volume in English. You never can tell what those queer people in London, Ontario, may have up their sleeve!

Shall We Waltz?

BY BERTHA ZELDA BECK

I am probably the only member of the synagogue who agrees with the President of the synagogue all the time. Being Vice President, I am in line for the job. Politically, I find myself in a position to agree with everybody.

I am the Complaint Department. If the rabbi's sermon is too long, it is my fault. If the cantor sings loud, it is my fault. If the honors at the Reading of the Torah are not given to everybody, it is my fault. What do I get out of being Vice President?

Truthfully, I don't know. All I know is that I take everybody's suggestions. They all feel sorry for me. The shool ought to be run like this, they say. Or like that. I take all the blame. I tell everybody, "You're right. You're right!"

I should like to see one synagogue where the rabbi doesn't speak too long, once in a while, the cantor doesn't sing too loud, once in a while, and everybody gets home by twelve o'clock every Shabbos.

That would be just as likely to happen to me as coming home on a Monday night and finding that Bluma hadn't prepared fish for supper. Monday night supper at our house is a strange meal. The older son, the younger son, and I eat as if we had to make a train. On Monday nights we never wait for Janie to come home from school because we can't wait to eat the fish that Bluma says is good for our brains. Especially for me, she says, seeing that I am slated to be President.

Who was it said every man gets the wife he deserves?

Well. But confidentially, I sometimes feel that Bluma is more than I deserve: a rabbi's daughter who quotes the Bible, and then looks up with that enigmatic smile and says, "If I put the Strauss record on, will you waltz?"

The older son, especially, finds his mother baffling. In this respect he is so much like me that I often sympathize with him. The younger son, however, takes his mother less seriously. He compares his mother with his teachers. If his teachers knew that, we suspect they would resign. He calls his teachers 'characters'. They are characters because they believe in a fellow doing his homework every night. They believe in work, work, work...

I silence my words of complete approval as a Vice-President should.

The younger son tries to get me to talk. "Can you imagine getting homework every day!" he says, spreading a quarter of a pound of butter on a crust of pumpernickel.

My Beloved Wife is talking about Freezers. She has been listening to nutritionists on the radio selling freezers. "Shall I buy a freezer or get a new coat?" she asks.

With business the way it is the answer is no to both questions — if I answered. Being a Vice-President I say:

"You're right, of course, Bluma."

The older son has been busy with 'Fish Maneuvers' which means an artful pushing around of the fish to the circumference of the plate, clearing the middle, and declaring himself ready to eat the next course, usually pie a la mode, in apology for the fish. The older son is wearing our best tie graciously again today. He wore it yesterday to take out a girl. He has been dating girls regularly since he was sixteen. Both Bluma and I have accepted that as part of his growing up, not even bothering to ask who the girl was. I must confess that I do sometimes ask, "Was she a blonde?"

Neither Bluma nor I listen too attentively as he talks about the girl he was out with yesterday. Bluma notices the tired lines around his eyes. "You look as if you didn't get enough sleep in a month," she says. "You ought to go to bed at nine tonight."

"It's not that, Mom. I look like this because I'm engaged. Practically. Just have to give her the ring."

I don't believe a word he is saying. I consider the statement a result of eating the brain food. But being Vice-President, I am always ready with the Mazel Tov. "Mazel Tov," I say. "I hope she's a blonde," which reminds me that I must save the Haftorah next Shabbos for a bridegroom to be. I had almost forgotten. The father of the bride wanted the cantor to officiate. But this Saturday is not the Saturday that the cantor sings. Can the cantor be persuaded? The man is a member . . . The choir, however is out of the question. The choir will not sing this Shabbos. It is not their Shabbos to sing and they will not be persuaded. They bring out their contract and wave it in my face. I like contracts to be kept in bottom drawers, all the time. And so the cantor will have to sing alone — if he will. Bluma has her hand on my arm. "Sam! Are you all right? It was fresh fish, Sam!"

"Nothing at all," I say, adding a scowl to the frown that must be already on my face. Somehow I frown easily on fish nights.

She is not satisfied. "Sam", she says, "how much will a ring cost?" Her voice is a whisper. She looks hurt, like a child who has just cut her finger. "It can't be possible, can it, Sam, for him to get engaged—so soon? He's so young—"

I realize at that moment that if the older son had said, "I'm married," life would be much simpler. I realize that Bluma is going to try to make the older son give up the idea of getting engaged.

"You're too young," she says to the older son. "How are you going to support a wife? You'll never finish your college courses!"

I say nothing, which means that the older son is not too young. I was married at his age. He can support a wife as soon as he gets his degree and enters my business. He won't drop his college work; he's a natural student.

I know one thing I can't talk about. I'm going to miss the boy.

Poor Bluma! She's going to miss him more. I look at her and realize, sorrowfully, that it is not the older son who is unprepared for his marriage. It is Bluma. She isn't grown up enough to be the mother of a married son. She could stop him. Many mothers have done that before, especially with a son as devoted as the older son.

I blow my nose and ask for another cup of coffee. I've got to stop Bluma from hurting the boy. He has to have his chance.

The younger son grins at me. "Imagine any girl wanting to marry him! I think Sister is home! Let me tell her!"

There is the sound of the front door opening and slamming shut. We all look up at Janie, standing in the kitchen doorway, her brief case bulging, her head bare, her gym shoes on their shoelaces, slung over her left shoulder. She looks at her mother and then at me.

"No fish tonight?" she says, sniffing.

The younger son pulls at her shoelaces and one of the sneakers snaps off. "There's going to be a wedding in our family, Sis. You'll have to get a new dress."

"Wedding?" she says, and her face goes a dark red.

She is our only daughter and we love her tenderly. Especially me, being her father and paying for all those closets full of clothes. Why does she blush so painfully? Could she be thinking of getting married? She's only sixteen!

The older son stands up and kisses her on the cheek. "Congratulations, Janie, I'm getting engaged."

She hugs him. "David! I'm so glad! Who is it?" She seems herself again. "Do I know her?"

"Helen — Helen Schwarz. She was a counsellor at that camp you went to three summers ago. She lives up in the Bronx."

Bluma hasn't given me my cup of coffee yet. She manages a small voice. "I — I don't know her, do I!"

"Helen Schwarz! Of course you do, Mother! She's blonde—and—"

"Blonde," I say and try to grin, but find it difficult. I had never realized that my joking about blondes might influence the older son. Janie doesn't notice. She keeps talking:

"Of course you remember, Mother! She was the counsellor in Bunk Twelve. She used to wear bright red shorts and navy blue sweaters. You always used to say how nice and clean she always looked."

Bluma is staring into the past. "I can't remember," she says. I am aware that this is another way of her saying she will not let the older son get engaged. I am aware too that the frown on my face will leave its mark — on me. I clear my throat. "Sit down and eat your supper, Janie. I want to have a word with your mother after we've done the dishes and I haven't much time. I have to be at the Monday night meeting at the synagogue at eight o'clock."

Janie washes and sits down. "What kind of an engagement ring do you think I ought to buy Helen?" the older son says.

Bluma has poured the coffee for me. "Then you didn't talk about the ring," she says. "Maybe you're just imagining you are engaged to her, darling." Bluma turns to me. "That's what it is, Sam."

"I'm not imagining anything," the older son says. "I spoke to her father. Besides, she's not a baby. She's graduating college this year. She's got good sense. We've liked each other a long time."

I am glad that he has asserted himself before things get too complicated. I am determined to set Bluma right.

"Bluma", I say, "will you come into the living room with me for a moment as soon as we finish our coffee?"

"Mother!" Janie cries, "you have to fix my dress. I have to wear it at the lecture at the Center tonight. The back bunches up . . ."

The younger son says, "Have you got a clothes pin, Mom? The fellows say that's the way to get a real French accent."

"I'll find you one tomorrow," Bluma says, "I have to fix Janie's dress." Bluma stops near the old-

MARRIAGES

SHROTT-ZUBATA

The marriage of Helena (Honey), daughter of Mrs. Rose Zubata, 246 Arlington Avenue, to Sydney Shrott, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Shrott, 125 Grace Street, took place on Wednesday, June 26, at seven o'clock, at Shaarei Shomayim Synagogue, with Rabbi Judah Washer officiating, assisted by Cantor N. Adler. The bride was given in marriage by her brother, T. Zubata. She wore a white Chantilly lace and nylon net gown, having a round neckline, long sleeves, and bouffant skirt, forming a long train. Her matching bonnet-effect headpiece was draped with a fingertip tulle illusion veil, and she carried a white Bible adorned with a white orchid, roses, and streamers. The matrons of honour were: Mrs. S. Miller, in pale green nylon tulle, and Mrs. M. Manou, of Buffalo, N.Y., in yellow nylon. Each had a matching face veil and carried a cascade of white and yellow roses. The bridesmaids, in pink net gowns, having accordion-pleated skirts and stoles, were: Misses Rosalie Mandell, of Detroit, Mich.; Barbara Zevon, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Helen Goldenberg, Lila Shiner, and Carole Friendly. They had matching face veils, and carried nosegays of pink, blue, white, and yellow seasonal flowers. Ilisse Miller, in a dress of ice-blue taffeta, with a full skirt over a crinoline, was flower girl. Her halo was of orange blossoms, and she carried a basket of rose petals. Abe Flatt was best man. The ushers were: Morton Smith, Norman Zeldin, Dr. Malcolm Yasny, Seymour Mandell, of Detroit, Mich.; Maurice Manou, of Buffalo, N.Y., and Sidney Brown. Irwin Dennis Manou, of Buffalo, N.Y., was ring-bearer. The altar was banked with white summer flowers in urns. The bride's mother wore an ankle-length nylon net gown, having a full skirt and stole-effect jacket, with floral headpiece, and a corsage of yellow and white roses. The groom's mother was in pale blue nylon net over taffeta, with matching net stole, blue net headpiece, and corsage of white and blue tinted roses. For the trip to the New England States, and New York, the bride left in a coral-coloured summer linen suit, with multi-coloured sandals, matching accessories, and a white orchid corsage. They are residing at 246 Arlington Avenue.

SHALL WE WALTZ?

est son and smiles. "What are you going to do now?"

"I'm going to call Helen on the telephone. I didn't speak to her at all today."

Bluma turns to me, her face troubled. "You won't be needing the phone, will you, Sam?"

"Look here, Bluma. I want to talk to you. When can you . . ."

"Maybe after I fix Janie's dress. Will you stack the dishes, Sam?"

Alone, in the kitchen, I stack the fish dishes. I will be firm with Bluma. "Darling," I'll say. No, I'd better not say Darling. She'll suspect something.

But I'll be firm. I'll make her understand that she is no longer the mother of infants. She is the mother of men. And Men have to Marry and leave their mother's cooking. She has to learn . . .

I am startled by her hand on my shoulder. I turn to face her. "Bluma," I begin firmly, "I . . ."

"I'm sorry you're so upset about the engagement, Mr. Vice-President. Please don't take it so hard. After all, you have to expect a boy to grow up and get married and go off to live with a wife! Sam, remember the verse — And Jacob kissed Rachel and lifted up his voice . . ."

"You're right," I say, out of habit. What else can I say? My Bluma is more than I deserve. How can I make her understand I love her in spite of that?

I go to the record player and put on a Strauss Waltz. I say: "Bluma, shall we waltz?" We waltz.

Ages And Stages In Childhood

BY DAVID WEISS, OF MONTREAL, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, BARON DE HIRSCH INSTITUTE AND THE JEWISH CHILD WELFARE BUREAU

In bringing up children, parents often bring themselves up too. Parenthood is a resultant of all the individual's life experiences, at a stage of daily testing and living out in relation to children. How we bring up children is, of course, not only determined by what kind of people we are, but also by the kind of society and culture in which we live. In the specific matrix of given personal and social forces, therefore, parents are always rediscovering the age-old wisdom of the human race. Modern psychology and education, as well as the humanities are also rediscovering the many lessons about childhood that our forebears learned through experience.

Everyone is familiar with Shakespeare's famous statement, "All the world's a stage, and all the men and women merely players . . . And one man in his time plays many parts, his acts being seven ages. At first the infant, mewling and puking in the nurse's arms, and the whining school boy, with his satchel and shining morning face, creeping like snail . . ."

In living with our children, and in enjoying this relationship and responsibility together, it is helpful often to remember that children, like other organisms, go through several stages of evolution and development. This is the growth process. It is also a process of "thwartration", which inevitably and often creates frustration on the part of parents and teachers. Yet current understanding of children would confirm what Shakespeare poetically revealed. Children, like families and other social institutions, go through various cycles from beginning through development until decline. Knowledge of this evolutionary process should make parents feel more comfortable and natural in their response to their children's expression and behaviour in growing up.

Most parents have learned this. As the Chinese say, "A little child weighs on your knee, a big one on your heart". Dr. Henry Fosdick has said that "Some parents bring up their children on thunder and lightning, but thunder and lightning never yet made anything grow. Rain and sunshine cause growth — quiet, penetrating forces develop life." Dynamic and social psychology have confirmed these insights.

Let us look at some of the ages and stages through which children grow. Although there is no average human being, or child, to which such ages and stages can be applied as measurements, nevertheless such indices are helpful. The growth of the human personality and character in the child is like a moving escalator or ladder. It is not, however, a ladder that is graduating into definite steps, and many phases interact as well as overlap.

The age of infancy from birth to two is usually the age of Pristine Childhood. The years from three to six may be likened to the Primitive Years of Childhood. From six to eight or nine the child goes through the Middle Age of Childhood. The years of puberty can be characterized as the Sleeping Beauty years. And of course from twelve until eighteen we are aware that the child goes through the Storm and Stress period of adolescence, which verges on adulthood.

Throughout these so-called eras of child development and growth, the child must achieve certain emotional phases in his experience. The quality of these emotional elements, the way in which the child is enabled to fully experience these feelings, derive from family life, relationships with parents and other children; in the school; in the play group. These reciprocal relationships and experiences significantly determine who and what emerges in the process of growth into the adult person.

Modern thinking concerning this emotional spectrum of personality development indicates that the following eight or nine senses need to be acquired by the child concurrently as he moves through the various stages of growth. As Dr. Erikson has very ably put it, every child needs to experience the sense of trust, the sense of autonomy, initiative, accomplishment, identity, intimacy, parental status, and a sense of integrity. In other words, does the infant really get the kind of protection and security his very life requires at birth?

Is he then able to combine the senses of independence of self with the dependence he has on his family and parents? Is he then allowed to explore and fulfil his expanding ability in moving, talking, and walking, etc? Is the child then allowed to achieve, to accomplish certain tasks within his ability and capacity? Then is the child able to know that he or she is a personality, worthy of dignity and respect in, of, and for himself? Then the child needs to know that he can love as well as be loved, that he can share and give as well as take and demand, and that it is right and proper to have feelings and accept those intimate feelings within his own family.

Finally in adolescence, the individual must acquire the conviction and sense that it is proper and healthy to become a parent eventually, which means loving and giving rather than just being loved and taking. And finally, of course, the integrated personality has been able to assimilate all the other experiences in the final step of mature adulthood, of functioning in the home, on the job, in society, harmoniously and purposefully.

Naturally, through this evolutionary growth of personality, there are times when children express to their parents and teachers the extra sense of "nonsense"! I think that it is only due and proper. Sense of humor, the ability to have perspective and to overlook, as well as to become overwhelmed by crises in living, is very important indeed. In bringing up children, of course, a parent must try very hard to "preserve his childish faith in things in which you no longer believe". As Oliver Wendell Holmes said, "It is very easy to criticize other people's modes of dealing with their children. Outside observers see results; parents see processes. To be a parent is almost to be a fatalist".

Just as children feel the need for recognition, of being loved and loving, of belonging to a worthy and necessary group, and having new experiences, so do parents need to find expression to such motivations of their own in rearing their children. I think that spontaneous, comfortable and relaxed living with children will bring such responses to one another between parents and children.

Of course, parents need to acquire two other essential ingredients in fulfilling their role, that of patience and fortitude, through every age and stage. Occasionally thunder and lightning cannot help but appear in the family atmosphere. The Chinese have said that no bones are ever broken by a mother's beating. Yet we must remember that it is the rain and sunshine of qualitative and loving response and guidance to our children that enables them and ourselves to live through every age and stage, until by helping our children to find their places as adults in society and in their own families, we succeed in fulfilling our own aims and high purposes as persons and parents.
